

Rutgers Eating Disorders Clinic

Description:

The Rutgers Eating Disorders Clinic (REDC) serves women and men who experience problems related to food, eating, weight, and body image. The REDC is operated under the auspices of the Graduate School of Applied and Professional Psychology of Rutgers, The State University of New Jersey. We offer consultation, assessment, and treatment services to all Rutgers University staff and students, as well as members of the community. The clinic is located in a professional district adjacent to the Livingston campus. Our mission is to provide services to members of the community, train doctoral students in clinical psychology, and conduct clinical research to better understand eating disorders.
